

Bio - Robline (Robbi) Davey

Robbi is the mother of an 8-year old boy, Oliver, and one of four sisters.

Originally from Prince George, BC, Robbi grew up in White Rock, attended high school and post-secondary in Vancouver, before moving to San Francisco for 15 years. There, she began working as an assistant in the Museum of Modern Art in SF, painting murals and trained as a graphic designer.

Currently, she is finishing up a Master of Education at Thompson Rivers University. Robbi's research interests include exploring the way distance learning and the digital spaces can provide increased access to post-secondary education for Indigenous students. A media specialist in online education, she plans to integrate design thinking and her recent experience as an online student, to bring an interdisciplinary and holistic approach to her research. Other research interests include roles that women currently hold and traditionally held in society, revitalization of traditional food, technology and craft, and how to support Indigenous education initiatives, all of which serve as mechanisms to bolster Indigenous health and well-being.
